Allen County Voters Speak Out on Education Reform Topics
Countwide survey finds strong support for school choice policies

INDIANAPOLIS – Voters in Allen County are in favor of school vouchers and charter schools, and prefer a robust range of options when it comes to educating their children, according to countywide survey data recently released by the Indianapolis-based Foundation for Educational Choice.

The county-level findings—emerging from the “Indiana K-12 & School Choice Survey” project—also reveal that Allen County voters are unaware of how much is spent in public schools; most respondents substantially underestimated per-student spending.

Highlights of the Allen County survey results:

- There is strong support for school vouchers in Allen County. In the countywide sample, a large gap exists between those who favor school vouchers (69%) and those who oppose school vouchers (25%) – equal to 44 percentage points.
Allen County voters are also more likely to favor charter schools (67%), rather than oppose such schools (17%). The gap between those who favor and those who oppose is 50 percentage points.

When asked for a preferred school type, there is a stark disconnect between Allen County voters’ first choices and actual school enrollment patterns. About 18% of Allen’s K-12 student population attends private schools, but in the survey, 53% of voters would select a private school as their first option. Approximately 80% of the county’s students attend regular public schools, but a much lower percentage of voters (30%) would choose a regular public school as their first choice. About 2% of the county’s student population is going to public charter schools, but 8% of Allen voters would like to send their child to a charter school. Another 8% of voters find homeschooling the most attractive option.

Allen County voters are under-informed with regard to how much is spent in the public schools. Roughly two out of three respondents (68%) underestimate per-student spending in the public schools. According to financial information the state provided the U.S. Department of Education for the 2007-2008 school year, total per-student spending on average was $8,867 to $10,164, depending on the spending definition used by the U.S. Department of Education. More than a third of voters (36%) thought the correct range was less than $4,000 per student. Another 32% of voters said it was in the $4,001-$8,000 spending range. There is a clear lack of awareness and understanding about how much money is spent to educate students in Indiana. Only 9% identified the correct spending range.

Paul DiPerna, Research Director for the Foundation for Educational Choice, discussed how the survey data reveal a penchant for a range of school options. “These results point to a big disconnect between Hoosiers’ schooling preferences and actual school enrollments,” said Mr. DiPerna. “Based on these survey results, there is little doubt that Allen County supports school vouchers and charter schools. Those who ‘strongly favor’ outnumber those who ‘strongly oppose’ by 3-to-1 on the school voucher question, and by 4-to-1 on the charter school question. There is more positive intensity for both of these school choice policies.”

These are findings from a Braun Research, Inc. poll conducted for the Foundation for Educational Choice from November 12-17, 2010. For the survey, a statistically representative, randomly selected sample of 351 registered voters across Allen County was interviewed by Braun Research via live telephone interviewing on landlines and cell phones. Statistical results were weighted to correct known demographic discrepancies. The margin of sampling error for the Allen County sample of interviews is ± 5.4 percentage points. Nationally-known research firms have hired Braun Research, including the Gallup Organization, the Pew Research Center, the Eagleton Poll, Mathematica Policy Research, and the Washington Post.
